SOME RECIPES

Maryland Biscuit.
Three pounds of flour, Southern wheat flour or a good patent flour; half a pound of pure lard and cold water to make a stiff dough. Also a little salt. Lay a cloth on the table, dredge with flour and put the dough on this. Beat it with a hard wooden mallet or mallet, if you do not possess the broad hammer used by the old-time Maryland cook. Roll up the dough and repeat the beating and rolling until the dough will snap when a small piece is pulled off. Pinch off the dough in small biscuits and knead them, thumb in the middle of each, into smooth biscuits, holding the centre. Place with a fork and place in greased pan, and near enough to touch, and bake in a fairly hot oven about twenty minutes; they must not brown much.

Baked Mutton Cutlets.
Prepare the cutlets as for frying by dipping them in beaten egg and then covering with fine, dry bread crumbs. Lay them in a dripping pan with very little water in the bottom; sprinkle with pepper and salt and bake, basting often with butter and hot water. When they are done make a little brown gravy with the stock in the pan, a little hot water, flour and seasoning. If there is no fat or liquid in the pan after frying or baking your meats there is always enough brown, glazed juice of the meat sticking to the pan to make good gravy stock by adding cold water from one-half to a cupful, and stirring it while the water heats to boiling point. Too much good stock is thrown away by not making use of this residue from the browning of meat in sautéing.

Danish Crullers.
Two eggs and one-half cup sugar beaten lightly together, one-half cup cream, one-half teaspoonful baking soda, a little nutmeg, add two and one-half cups of flour, which will make a dough sufficiently stiff to roll out on a floured board; then cut in about two and one-half inch diamond-shaped pieces, cut a slot in centre and double one end through the hole. Drop into a skillet of hot lard and let them turn to a light brown.

Bran Cookies.
Sift together three cups of bran, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful each of ginger and cinnamon and half a teaspoonful of cloves and mix thoroughly; add one-half cup each of sugar, molasses and milk and one-half cup shortening (melted over hot water) and mix all together thoroughly. Drop from a spoon upon a buttered pan. Bake fifteen minutes. If preferred, the spices may be omitted.

A NECK FINISH

Velvet ribbon, lace and jet balls are here used to advantage.

For tired feet make a mixture of alcohol and lemon juice and rub on the feet and ankles.

After scrubbing thoroughly, make a few slits in the skin of potatoes that are to be baked.

A little borax, dissolved in warm water, will help to keep the children's teeth clean and sound.

Common soap, rubbed on the hinges of a creaking door, will do away with the trouble.

Fasten a pin cushion to the top of the sewing-machine arm, and whole minutes will be saved.

A hot-water plaster is a boon to the housewife whose "men folks" are frequently late for dinner.

The business man's lunch of a glass of milk and a piece of apple pie is really a well-chosen meal.

Add a pinch of borax to the rinsing water of handkerchiefs, if you would have them a little stiff.

Baked apples are delicious with their cores filled with orange marmalade or chopped nuts and sugar.

The Great Trials of History

Trial of Martin Luther.

The trial of Martin Luther was an ecclesiastical rather than a civil trial. The great Reformer was not called into court, where he was compelled to submit to the questions of judge and jury, but instead he was hauled before the now famous Diet of Worms, in A. D. 1521 and 1522, where the ecclesiastics put him to the test on the charge of heresy.

Luther was ordained a priest on Sunday, May 2, 1507, and at once began preaching at several places and writing books. It was these books on religion which had such an effect on the minds of the people that he was arrested and brought before the Diet of Worms.

Luther entered Worms on the 16th of April at 10 o'clock in the morning, and was attended by a number of cavaliers. As the cart in which he rode passed the gates, the warden on the top of the wall flew a blast on his trumpet.

The doctrines which Luther had promulgated had divided the country for and against him, but the princes of the Empire stood by the Reformer, at least to the extent that they were willing to see he had fair play at his trial. The Diet sat in the bishop's palace and the following evening Luther appeared before them. His presence in which he found himself would have tried the nerves of the most brave men. The Emperor, sternly hostile, with his retinue of Spanish hussars and nobles, the archbishops and bishops, were all of the opinion that the stake was the only place for such an insolent heretic.

As Luther was passing through an anteroom to his trial, one of the nobles, George of Brandenburg, touched Luther on the shoulder and said: "Little monk, little monk, thou hast work before thee that I and many other men, whose trade is war, never faced the like of. If thy heart is brave, and thy cause is good, go on in God's name. He will not forsake thee."

A pile of books stood on the table when he was brought forward. The officers of the court read the titles and asked him if he was ready to retract them. He answered in a low voice that they were his books. As to retracting the statements they contained, Luther asked for a little time to consider, and he was given until the following day.

On the following morning, April 18, Luther had collected himself and felt a renewed vigor. His old enemy Eck was this time the spokesman against him, and asked him what he intended to do. He said his writings were of three kinds—some were gospel truth, which he admitted, and which he could not retract; some were against papal laws and customs, which he claimed had tried the people's consciences. If he retracted these he would cover himself with shame. In a third he had attacked particular persons and had been too violent. Even this he declined to retract simply, but would admit his fault if fault could be proved.

Luther gave his answers in clear voice, first in Latin and then in German. Eck claimed he had spoken disrespectfully. To the Diet he said: "Let him retract on these points and he shall have consideration on the rest." He asked for a plumb "yes" or "no" from him, "without horns." This taunt aroused Luther's blood. To this he replied: "I will give you an answer which has neither horns nor feet. Prove against me the scriptures that I have uttered and I will submit. Till then my conscience binds me. Here I stand, I can do no more. God help me. Amen."

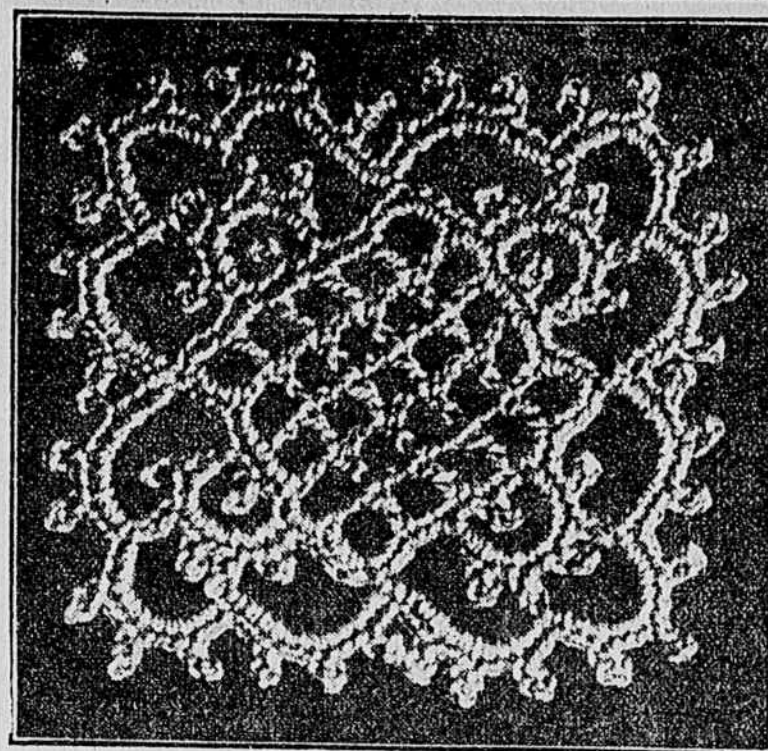

All day long the storm raged. Night fell and torches were lighted in the hall before the sitting closed. Luther was dismissed, and it was supposed by all that he was to be placed in a dungeon. But the hearts of the members of the Diet had been touched by the courage he had shown, and they would not permit a hand to be laid on him.

When Luther reached his lodgings he threw up his hands and cried out: "I am through. I am through. If I had a thousand heads to lose they would all be struck off one by one before I would retract. The same evening the Elector Frederick sent for him and told Luther he had done well and bravely. But though he had escaped so far, he was not acquitted.

At the session the following day the archbishop of Travers told Luther that if he would acknowledge certain infallibilities he would not be punished, but Luther stood firm, and the Elector ordered him home until the Diet should decide upon his fate. A majority of the council, it was now clear, would pronounce for his death.

On his way back through the forest of Thuringia an armed force set upon him and carried him to Wartburg Castle. There he remained under the name of Elster George, who was supposed to be some captive knight. On the 8th of May the Diet of Worms was adjourned.

Luther under the ban of the Empire, but he had become as vulnerable as the air, and the trial of Martin Luther had miscarried, that is so far as those who conspired against him were concerned.
